WHAT I LEARNED FROM INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION AS A COORDINATOR.

Coaching & Mentoring

Combining my two passions of human rights and mentoring led me to coaching up-and-coming leaders, change-makers, and advocates.

It is my way of combining my many years of experience in social justice advocacy, Social Development with my keen interest in building community and helping others to become their best selves.
International human rights law and advocacy has been my passion for over two decades.

Because Human rights are built on the concept of human dignity. Dignity, respect, empathy, kindness, compassion, acceptance, courage, and love, are the values I try to bring to my world and share with those around me. As a Volunteer Coordinator I'm not always successful at doing this "" that's why I see my life, like my profession as a practice, every day is an opportunity to keep practicing, learning and improving Others.

Since I was young I've been interested in using mentoring as a way of enhancing these practices for Equal to all.

I first set up a Young Talented Student Competition Program in 2007 my first year of Junior high school to help pair new students with more experienced seniors, helping build acceptance and courage in our school community. Promoting and building opportunities for mentoring became something I continued doing throughout my life, finding formal and informal ways to help those more experienced to give back and reach out a helping hand to others, and to support and promote those just starting out (in their studies, their professions, in extra-curricular activities, or in moving to a new city).

During my this Tenure In International Human Rights Commission As a Coordinator

I work with those who want to change the world, I help them to establish And deepen their careers in the international Human Rights Commission IHRC.

And I work with those who seek to change their worlds, to develop clarity, connection, and confidence, and Attend many International program. SMM IHRC Their Daily working has led me to work with people from all walks of life, Chengemakers, Advocates, presidents and other world leaders, to grassroots activists, labourers, homeless people, and almost everyone in between.

This has been a privilege and an honour, and I want to share the lessons I've learned through these experiences with others who are trying to change the world. With Full Humanity and Equal

One of the most important lessons I have learned along the way is that in order to change the world we often need to change our worlds "" in particular the way that we lead and manage our own lives and relationships.

Majority Of International Human Rights Commission Volunteers that I work with are those who unashamedly want to create a better world, for themselves and for others, a world where human rights and human dignity are respected, protected, and fulfilled.

Together, we figure out how to do this, and what information and resources are needed, whether that's on a global scale or in their own personal lives.
